

Art / Fashion in the 21st Century

Mitchell Oakley Smith
Alison Kubler

With a foreword by
Daphne Guinness

With 238 colour illustrations

Thames & Hudson

From boutique to gallery: Fashion, art and architecture

246

Introduction 248 / Sergio Rossi & Antonino Cardillo 254 / Bless Shops 258 /
Louis Vuitton store design 262 / Fondation Louis Vuitton pour la création 266 /
Montblanc: Cutting Edge Art Collection & Art Bags 268 /
Fondation Cartier pour l'art contemporain 270 /
Prada store design 272 / Fondazione Prada 278 / Prada Transformer 280 /
In conversation: Dennis Freedman, Barneys New York 282 /
Selfridges: Store windows, The Museum of Everything & Tracey Emin 286 /
Fondation d'entreprise Hermès 292 / ZegnArt 294 /
'Chanel Mobile Art' exhibition pavilion 298 / Gucci Museo 300 /
Fondazione Nicola Trussardi 304

Sergio Rossi & Antonino Cardillo

As part of the 2010 Salone del Mobile in Milan, the annual international design fair, Sicilian architect Antonino Cardillo was engaged to create a temporary men's boutique for Italian footwear maker Sergio Rossi at the initiative of design magazine Wallpaper*. The ephemeral shop, built within the brand's permanent store in Milan, remained open for two seasons before embarking on a world tour to promote the Rossi men's collection. Each stage of the tour was marked by a unique store configuration, such as in the Galeries Lafayette Casablanca in Morocco, where Sergio Rossi commissioned local firm Youssef Duret Design to create a three-dimensional shelving system in which to display the footwear.

Cardillo's design centred on the concept of superimposition, the insertion of one building into another, a recurring theme in architecture of the past, seen, for instance, in the medieval schola cantorum of the Basilica di Santa Maria in Cosmedin in Rome, and in the miniature architect Holy Sepulchre that the 15th-century architect Leon Battista Alberti installed in the Tempietto in Florence. For the first incarnation of his temporary structure in the Sergio Rossi boutique in Milan, Cardillo made use of the existing wooden space, articulated by a grille of exposed vertical beams to create a rhythmic sequence of vertical planes suggestive of cathedral vaulting, employing light grey tones and velvet curtains in the decor. A marriage of the sacred and profane, the design was intended both to augment and disrupt the reverence with which fashion products are presented and viewed in shops. The shoes themselves were displayed sparingly on tall plinths, lit theatrically with downlighting, emphasizing the museum-like quality of the space and bringing additional gravitas to the shopping experience.

Opposite and pages 256–57: Temporary Sergio Rossi menswear boutique, designed by architect Antonino Cardillo as part of the Salone del Mobile, Milan, 2010, in collaboration with Wallpaper* magazine.

